The Journal of Religion, Disability & Health provides an interfaith, interdisciplinary forum that supports people with disabilities and their families through religious, spiritual, clinical, educational, and scientific perspectives. There is a growing awareness of the importance of spirituality and religion in health and human services. This journal addresses the critical ethical, moral, and spiritual issues raised by people with disabilities in health and rehabilitation services. The Journal of Religion, Disability & Health allows people interested in the intersections of religion, disability, and health and human services to come together, meet, and learn.

The Journal of Religion, Disability & Health strives to explore the richness of religious and spiritual life in both persons dealing with issues of disability as well as those who love and support them. Articles include research, clinical and pastoral reflections, theory and theology, and other media for spirituality such as poetry, sermons, prayers, and stories.

The Journal of Religion, Disability & Health explores such issues as:
- meeting the spiritual needs of people with learning disabilities;
- seminal Jewish attitudes toward people with disabilities;
- the local church as a network supporting adults with disabilities in the community;
- breaking barriers through inclusive religious education;
- perspectives on disability from Eastern religions.

Most issues of the journal include examples from research, theory, practice, and personal pilgrimage. Special thematic issues of the journal have included collections of key writers and leaders in spirituality and disability, international and interfaith perspectives on disability, graduate theological education, a history of religious advocacy, and more. Proposals for thematic issues of the journal are welcome.
